PRAGYAN ROVER Sleep Mode

With sunset on the Moon, the Pragyan rover has gone into sleep mode and its payloads have also been switched off.

This has been done to cope with the night period of the moon, because during the night the temperature of the moon drops to minus 200 degrees Celsius. The duration of one night on the Moon is equal to 14 Earth days.

Apart from this, ISRO has also successfully completed a HOP experiment.

Under this experiment, Lander Vikram raised itself up to about 40 cm above the lunar surface and landed safely at a distance of 30-40 cm. This will help in future human missions in collecting samples from the Moon and bringing them to Earth.
